

An internet business that gave us total freedom

The lake was a mirror as we tied up the boat for the night. She went and started up the oil torches, and we walked along looking for signs of life in the water, moving bunches of minnows with our steps. Then the giant mosquito's chased us quickly into the safety of the screen porch.

A bucket of ice, and fresh lemonade with uv blue in the candle light sounds in order for the evening. I look out over the bay, and spot a bunch of loons having a little get together of their own. Then with their haunting whistle, they take off to their summer beds before the sunset.

The full moon starts to fill the bay, and the reflection is like a giant mirror. I turn the radio on, and the rolling stones wild horses is playing. She sinks into my arms her body glowing from the sun, the fresh air has made us tired and we just take it easy in the flickering candle lit night.

We spend August this way. Escaping into the serenity of the forest near a town with just enough amenities, finding a cool sandy beach on these hot afternoons. Coffee in the mornings on the deck are the best. I love the shadows of the morning, but they never seem to last long enough.

It's time to motivate, and get heading into town to get the things we need to survive on the water for the next few days. We get the cooler ready, pack up the boat, and head off to our favorite stretch of sand. It drops off so perfectly, and is cool and clear. The best beach we ever found.

This is the best way on a warm summer day to just let time pass by, with an umbrella and the cooler near by, we hang in the water for awhile, then head to the shade to and talk about plans for the evening. Nothing seems to be a definite, and it doesn't seem to matter. Were in no hurry.

We watch a couple of eagles fly by overhead, then lay back on our blanket, then back in the water were she reminds me we don't have to rush. Were here for awhile, and not to let anything matter except the moment were in. The power of intention is at work here, it's a beautiful thing.

It never used to be this easy. We realized if we kept up with the same old grind, we were only making someone else wealthy. We found an amazing internet business, and it didn't happen over night, but we now work at home with this excellent affiliate opportunity, and do very well.
